Joy in Jesus

Article by Luzerne Cheng
Shepherd (Varsity)

Christian joy is an inward satisfaction rooted in Jesus' person and work—regardless of circumstances.

When My Joy Ran Low

I've been a dad for just over a year. It's been amazing—and revealing. Parenthood exposed a heart running low on joy. I caught myself sighing as I cleaned, picked up after my son, and served my wife. I did the duties of a husband and father, but without delight. The form was there; the heart wasn't.

“My joy rose and fell with external circumstances, not with the Lord... They’re good, but they don’t last. Only then did Philippians 4:4 land: ‘Rejoice in the Lord always.’ My joy is to be found in the Lord—Jesus alone”.

A Wake-Up at Church Camp

It came to a head at camp. Our son didn’t sleep, and I found myself asking God, “Why are we even here? This is so hard. I don’t want to do this again.” After telling my wife, I realised I’d been going through the motions. Friends said it’s normal for sleep-deprived parents, but it still troubled me. If joy is the Spirit’s fruit, shouldn’t He help me rejoice especially when it’s hard? How?

Processing with my accountability group showed this: my joy rose and fell with external circumstances, not with the Lord.

Seeing and Savoring Christ

In a preaching class my professor said: don't just draw lines to Jesus—help people see and savour Him. If we don't kindle joy in Christ on Sunday, people will chase knockoff joys elsewhere. That pierced me. I had been looking for joy in good gifts—my son, my wife, other comforts—rather than in Christ Himself. They're good, but they don't last. Only then did Philippians 4:4 land: “Rejoice in the Lord always”. My joy is to be found in the Lord—Jesus alone.

Joy Can Coexist with Lament

Hard circumstances may bring grief, yet the inner person can rejoice. Christian joy isn't the world's happiness that depends on smooth conditions; it's a settled gladness that begins with knowing Christ, reshapes our affections, and shows in our actions and reactions.

Practising Joy

At times we're like a rich man's child—living in Jesus' blessings yet taking them for granted. Two questions help me fight for joy:

- What if Jesus were not like this toward me?
- How would my life look without Him in the picture?

These require slow reflection, but they're worth it.

An Invitation

I'm learning to find my joy in Jesus alone—and it's better with companions. Will you join me on this journey to seek and savour Him?
